The collision between a man and a woman gives birth to an aquatic confinement. The woman indulges in a subtle and gracious existence. The fusion with what nature awakes on her impels to develop in new worlds, worlds of hunger, survival, laxity; an all the most sublime reality. A new life is generated; moves, breaths, flows in a place of embryonic echoes. The arousing of the touch at the earth's material complexity obliges her to confront her own ephemeral condition and the destructive power of creation. The man appears and disappears.
